Architecture Students Fabricate Sculptural Benches at the University of Houston

The Infill Bench project at the University of Houston brought together architecture students and cutting-edge 3D printing technology to create sculptural outdoor seating using additive manufacturing. By leveraging Rhino, Grasshopper, and industry partnerships, students explored complex geometries and innovative material applications, leaving a lasting impact on the campus design.